salem is . . .

Gloria Joyce Van Houten

. . . people and places creating an atmosphere of beautiful simplicity

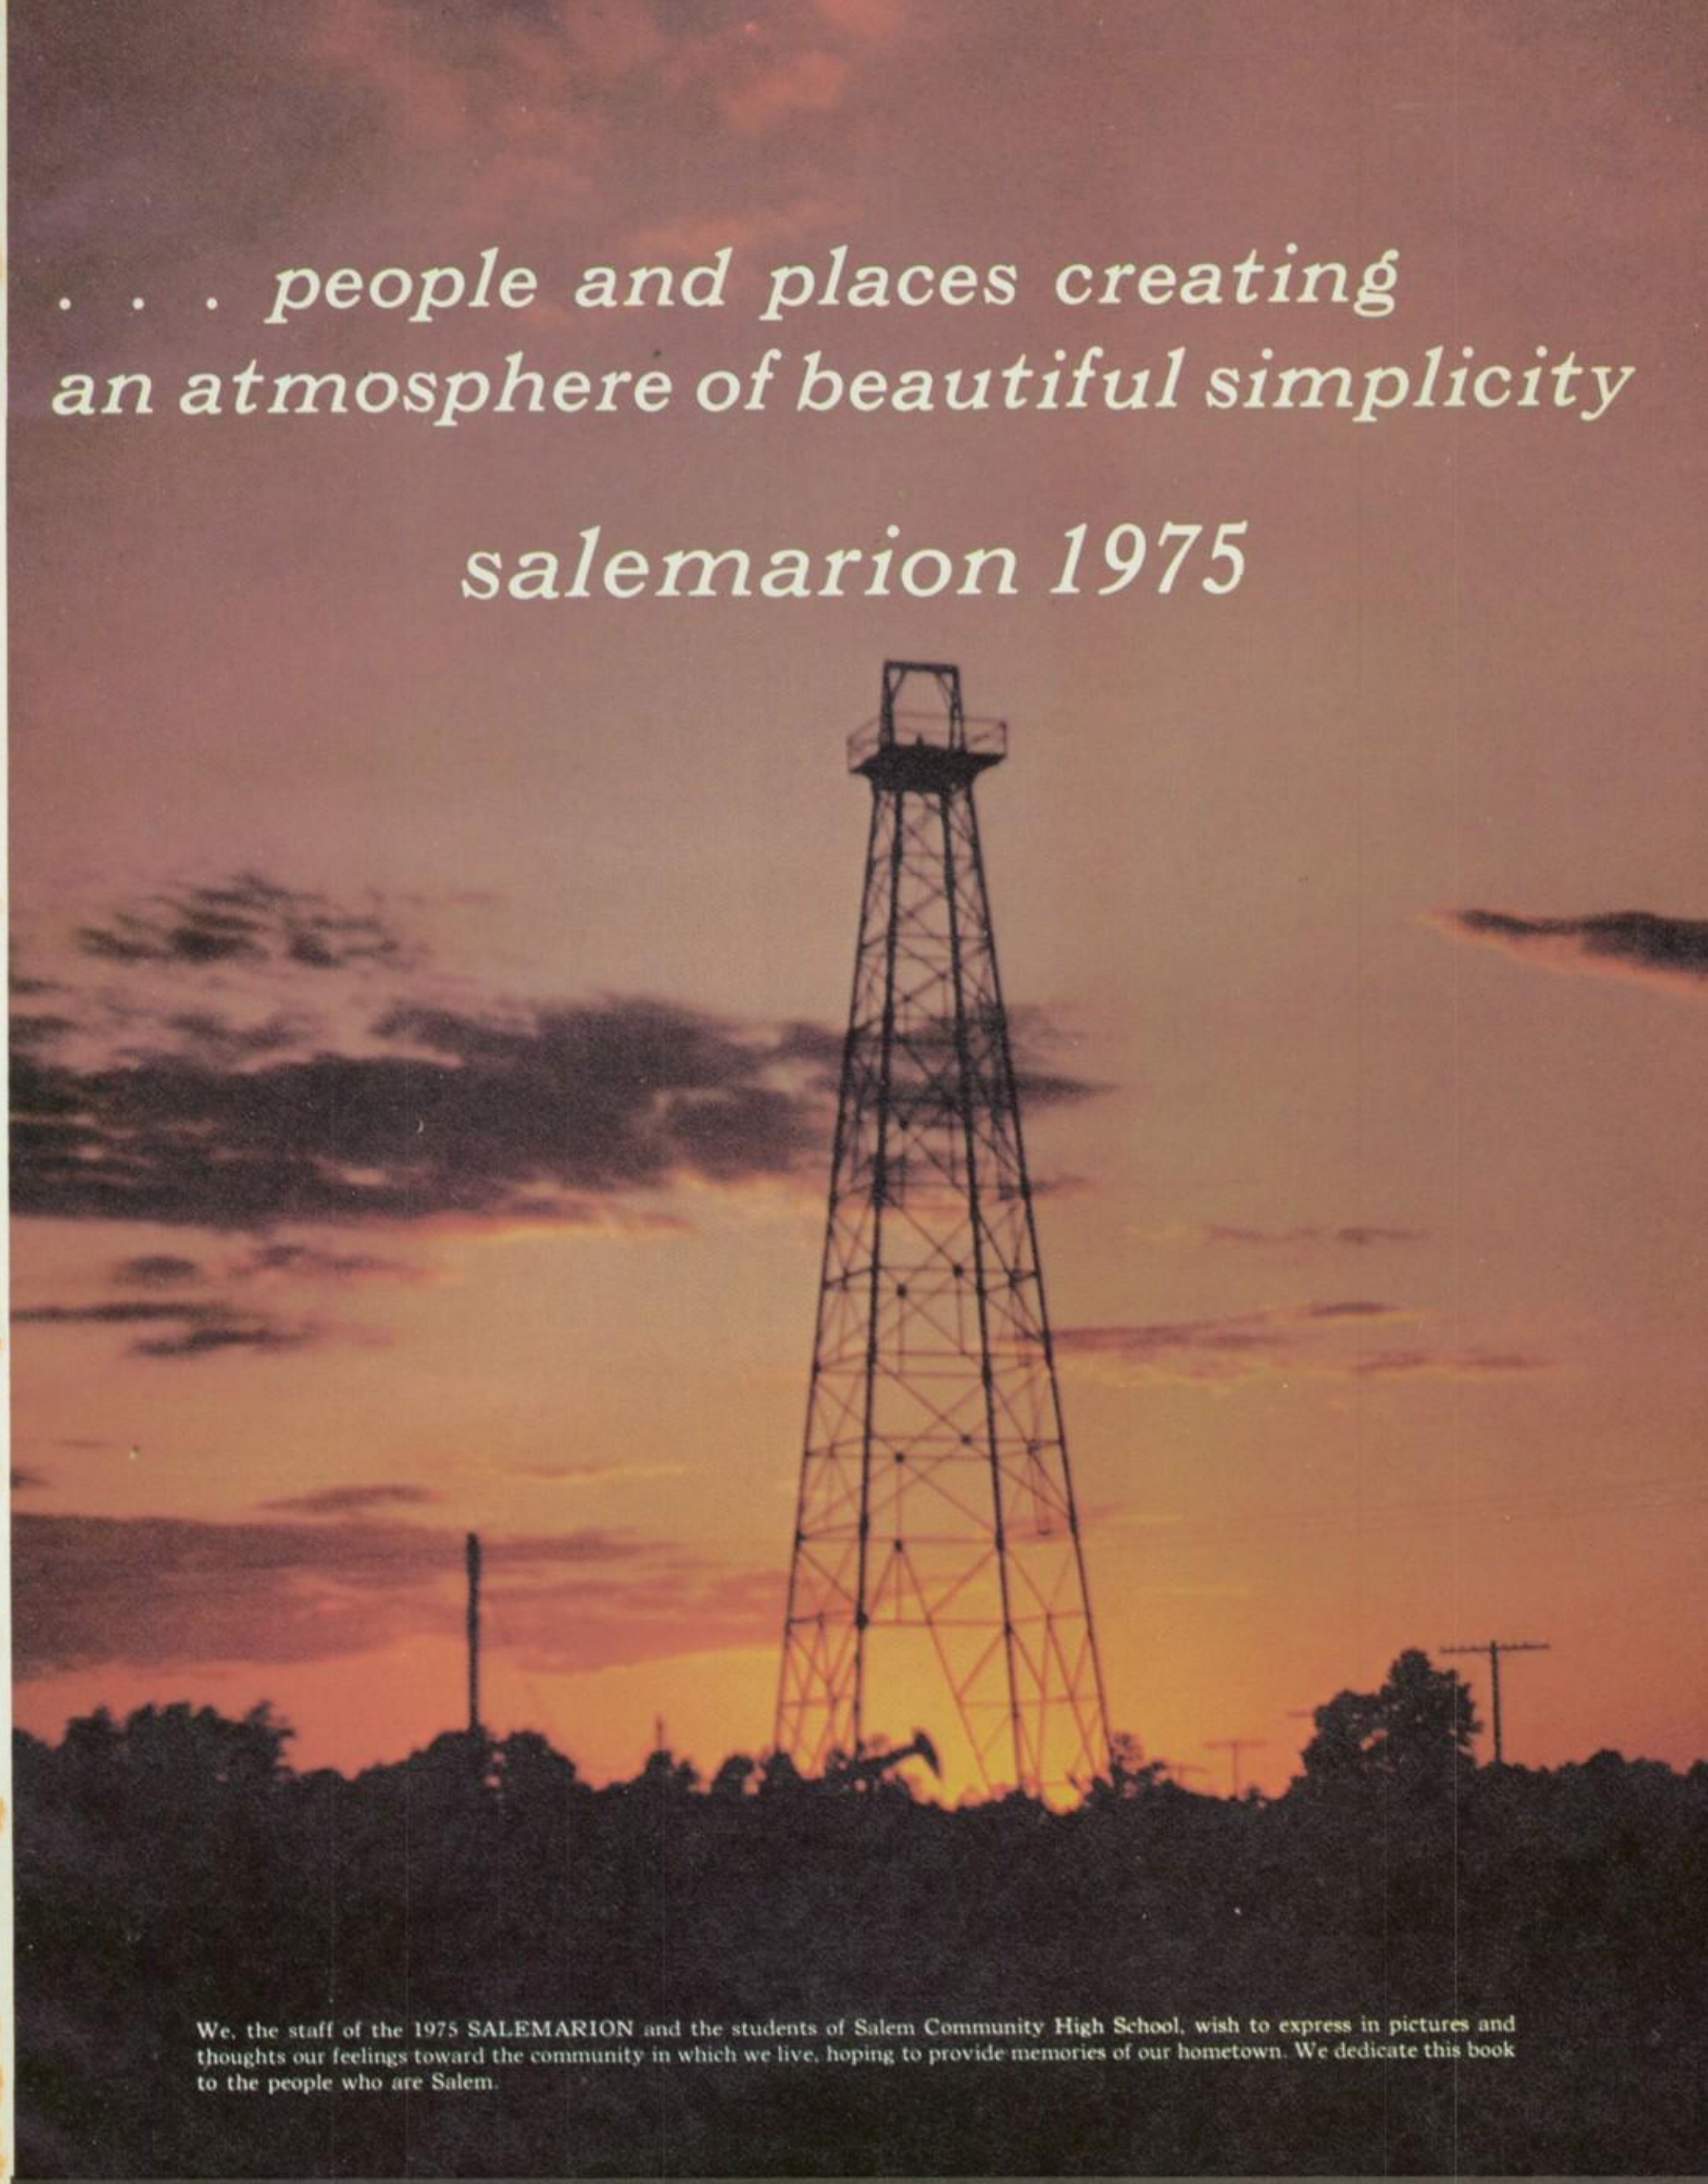
salemarion 1975



We, the staff of the 1975 SALEMARION and the students of Salem Community High School, wish to express in pictures and thoughts our feelings toward the community in which we live, hoping to provide memories of our hometown. We dedicate this book to the people who are Salem.

. . . places

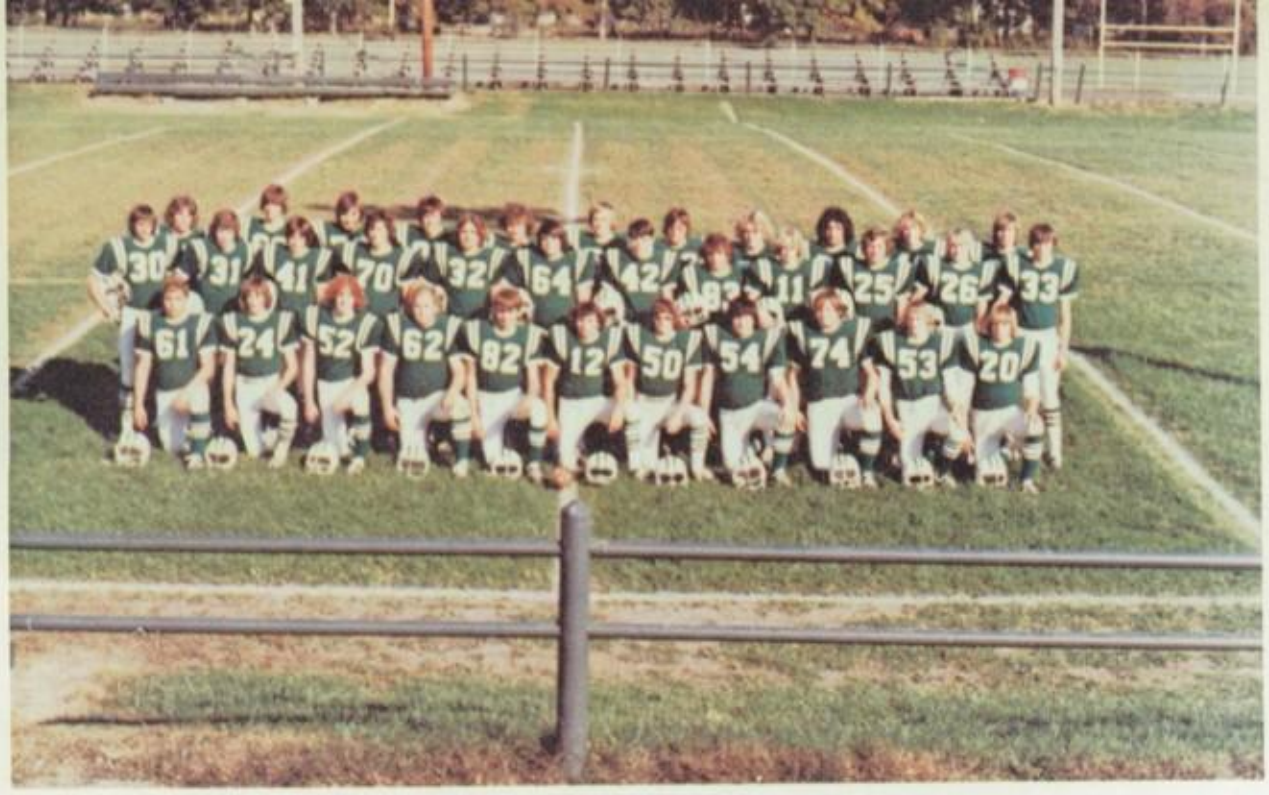
Salem has a uniqueness that is ironically characteristic of all small towns in the United States. The local stores, churches, schools, and parks are all observed, used, and too often, taken for granted. It is our town and we are the basic elements; our environment affects our character as much as our family and friends do. Our natural surroundings provide a fitting background for the places in which we work, play, grow, and learn together.

Situated almost exactly halfway between St. Louis, Mo. and Vincennes, Indiana, Salem is a small town possessing the distinctions of midwestern life. The countryside around Salem is characterized by country churches and schools, time-worn barns and homes, and isolated cemeteries with crumbling stones. The Midwest is notorious for slow change; yet change and growth do eventually come. This fact holds true for Salem, still basically a rural community, but growing steadily with new businesses and industries.

Salem has many places that distinguish it from other small towns. Salem is the birthplace of William Jennings Bryan, three times a presidential candidate. The Bryan home is still standing today. Salem is the county seat of Marion County; therefore, it has the courthouse, a stunning and memorable sight by night. Bryan Park has a picturesque beauty during every season of the year. Although there are places that are known to many as belonging especially to Salem, each and every resident probably has at least one clear image of a place that recalls a special memory of what Salem is to him.

A crowd, excited and unorganized, is a chance for everyone to be himself, enjoy a carefree time, put responsibility and pressures aside for a while. People gather together, meeting new faces, encountering old friends. It is a time in which confidence swells to a maximum, when emotion is displayed aloud, where seconds and minutes turn into memories that last for years.



It has been written that "no man is an island entire of itself, every man is a piece of the continent a part of the main." It is all the people of Salem together who determine the character of this community. Here in Salem can be found a wide spectrum of groups and organizations, some with quickly attainable successes, some with long-range goals. People are constantly gathering together to share success and failure, growing as individuals, growing as teams. One chance to be a part of a group is through organized athletic activities. Athletics develop not only the body, but also various mental attitudes toward good sportsmanship, self-discipline, and co-operation. The value of organizations to the overall good of the community is evidenced through the Red Cross, Scouts, 4H Clubs, Rotary, the Junior Women's Club, the Hospital Auxiliary, and various church groups. Salem is filled with wonderful people that are working together to better their hometown.

Knowing oneself can often be best achieved by developing a close relationship with someone else. The choice of a close friend can often indicate to a person his true beliefs on what is most important in a person's character. A bond between two people cannot be developed overnight. It takes time, time filled with open conversation that enables the two people to develop their own opinions and express them to each other. The quiet moments spent in thought and conversation with a close friend are often the most memorable. One Salem High student simply expresses this idea in the following sentences: "I do honestly think when I remember this town or when I think about it, I will remember a girl. I'll think of the places we went, the things we did, and the fun and the fights we had."

. . .being alone

Being alone is having the opportunity to know oneself. This creates an atmosphere for meaningful thought. The value of such time alone cannot be measured. When alone, goals are set; decisions are made; convictions become established.

football through the eyes of a senior:
we came together in the fall as 30 individuals; we sweated together; we cursed together; we worked long and hard together. sometimes we hated one another, and sometimes we were friends. we fought together, laughed together, and cried together. though we tried our hardest and failed, we went down as a team, fighting together until the final whistle and even after the end came, still fighting on as one team.
